There has been much progress in the children's rights movement, but more nations must act to protect those who most need it. As a former judge, I saw firsthand how crimes against children affected their future. Children are a nation's future. The best gift we can give to the world is to ensure a safe, healthy, educated, and able future ...

Children's rights and children's wellbeing are often casually paired together in both academic literature and policy discussions, but they differ conceptually, methodologically and politically. This has become particularly evident in Scotland, where 'landmark' children's legislation in 2014 has set up a clash between statutory requirements for children's rights and children's wellbeing.

The overrepresentation of African-American and Native American children in the child welfare system is a troubling and complex phenomenon. Thirty-three percent of kids in foster care are African-American, but they make up only 15 percent of the child population.. Yet federal studies indicate that child abuse and neglect is actually lower for black families than it is for whites.
