Electrical shock: First aid By Mayo Clinic Staff The danger from an electrical shock depends on the type of current, how high the voltage is, how the current traveled through the body, the person's overall health and how quickly the person is treated. An electrical shock may cause burns, or it may leave no visible mark on the skin.

Electric Shocks: First Aid Advice | Electrical Safety First

NEVER touch the person receiving the electric shock, or you could suffer one too. After removing the person from the source of electricity, if the person is unconscious call for an ambulance immediately. Only those with the necessary knowledge and skill should carry out first aid. Where the person is conscious and seems well, it is still advisable to monitor their condition, as the effects of an electric shock may not be immediately obvious.
