1. Before you bring a book into your writing workshop to use as a mentor text, read it for enjoyment and comprehension during a different part of the day. Students need to have an opportunity to enjoy and talk about the content of a text before they are asked to examine it closely and use it to learn about writing.
2. Explicitly teach students how to read a book as writers.

It's a particularly good text to read during the Social Issues unit. It's nice to read this book before or after reading other books that deal with gender issues such as, William's Doll, or Oliver Button is a Sissy. It's a good mentor text for the Realistic Fiction unit because the story takes place across two scenes.
