The phrase, "Pull yourself up by your own bootstraps" is one that is embedded in the American lexicon. As we have discussed in earlier modules, this is often the predominant mind set when it comes to explaining poverty. There is a widespread belief that with hard work and effort, anyone can avoid falling into poverty.

"Working Hard, Working Poor addresses the world's greatest economic problem. Even in this time of cell phones, international e-mail and globalization more generally, a full half of the world's population has less than $2.50 per day in purchasing power. There is not enough wage employment for those who want to work.

Working poor - Wikipedia

The overwhelming number of "the poor" are working poor. There are plenty of rich people who depend on their labor to make them rich. They may also work hard at figuring out how to squeeze more labor productivity out of working people, or not. Actual "free loaders" are probably statistically insignificant in the grand scheme of things.

The working poor are working people whose incomes fall below a given poverty line due to low-income jobs and low familial household income. These are people who spend at least 27 weeks in a year working or looking for employment, but remain under the poverty threshold. In the US, the official measurement of the working poor is controversial.
